

NEW HAMPSHIRE
CHARITABLE FOUNDATION

ON A MISSION

2017 ANNUAL REPORT

New Hampshire's nonprofits are

ON A MISSION

...to help our kids thrive

...to tell the truth
about our history

...to welcome
people home

...to prevent addiction

...to make sure no
one goes hungry

...to sustain
local farms

...and so much more.

New Hampshire's nonprofits are on a mission to make New Hampshire better for every single person who calls New Hampshire home. We, all of us, need them. Our quality of life and the strength of our community depends on them. We thank them, and celebrate them, and stand in admiration of their work.

The New Hampshire Charitable Foundation made grants to almost 1,800 nonprofit organizations in 2017 thanks to generous contributions from New Hampshire residents and businesses.

LAKES REGION CHILD CARE SERVICES

On a mission to help our kids thrive

Miss Gail helps a dozen 4-year-olds learn to navigate their worlds. They go from outdoor play to learning to make orange juice with a juice press (“That’s a lever!”), then gather in a circle to read “The Peace Rose,” a story about taking turns talking, respecting each other and resolving conflict.

Gail, who has a master’s degree in early childhood, makes the flow of events seem effortless.

“Having things look effortless takes mad skills and years of experience,” says Lakes Region Child Care Services Executive Director Marti Ilg. “And we can’t pay her enough.”

From four locations in three communities, Lakes Region Child Care serves 424 infants and children from 28 towns. Some are the children of doctors. Some have parents in jail. Almost half receive some form of scholarship. Here, children learn together in a stable, safe, nurturing place.

Nonprofit child care centers across the state support New Hampshire’s workforce and economy while providing critical early learning experiences to preschoolers. Centers operate on tight budgets, sliding tuition scales and low wages, but the cost of quality care remains difficult for many families to afford.

Learning in the early years lays the foundation for all learning that follows. An average $7 is saved in societal costs for every $1 invested in early childhood.

Teachers like Miss Gail help children thrive, and thriving children grow into the adults who will sustain our communities tomorrow.

And yet, the median hourly wage for early childhood workers in the United States is $10.72. That is slightly less than the median wage for parking lot attendants.

THE BLACK HERITAGE TRAIL OF NEW HAMPSHIRE

On a mission to tell the truth about our history

A community of Revolutionary War veterans and their families in Newport. A Dartmouth-educated minister of an all-white congregation in Sutton. Business people. The founding mother and father of the town of Lempster. Fiddlers and dance callers. The first African-American woman ever to publish a novel. Laborers and healers. One of the country's very first integrated schools, dragged off its foundation by an angry mob in Canaan. An African burying ground in Warner.

The early history of African-American settlement and community in New Hampshire is far more complex and substantial than is commonly understood.

"We have come to a place where we have forgotten these stories," said JerriAnne Boggis, executive director of the Black Heritage Trail of New Hampshire. "History creates roots. If you cut out the roots, you are always starting new. This history, being visible, creates a sense of belonging."

The trail began as the Portsmouth Black Heritage Trail and documented sites along the Seacoast, including the Portsmouth African Burying Ground. Under Boggis' leadership, it has expanded statewide to ensure a richer understanding of our shared heritage.

Many stories of African Americans were pushed, systematically, to the margins and shadows and grown-over burial places. Careful scholarship is now bringing those stories back to light.

"If we could embrace our history," Boggis said, "I think we could have a really good chance of healing race in this country."

TWIN PINES HOUSING

On a mission to welcome people home

Diane did not like having to ask for help. Not at all.

She was on her own with two kids after her marriage ended. She had moved her aging parents to a mobile home in the area, so she could care for them, and her youngest was still in school. She had been a stay-at-home mom, working in her husband's business — but all that was gone.

She got a job, working six days and two nights, but without health insurance or paid time off. Her pay could not cover the cost of rent and utilities in the Upper Valley, where vacancy rates are notoriously low and housing costs notoriously high.

Twin Pines Housing provided the safety net her family needed — in the form of an affordable two-bedroom apartment in the community where Diane's son was in school.

"It took away the gloom and doom and some of the fear. That was a relief," Diane said.

When Diane was diagnosed with a life-threatening congenital disorder, the one thing she did not have to worry about was losing her family's housing. "It was peaceful to know that somebody had my back."

Having stable housing helped her focus on regaining her health, and on securing a new job as a rehab technician in a physical therapy practice. Her new job offers insurance and sick time.

"Work is important to me, and providing for my children is important to me, and I know I am going to get stronger," Diane said. "If it was not for Twin Pines' help, I don't know what would have happened. Would we be homeless? Maybe."

MAKIN' IT HAPPEN COALITION FOR RESILIENT YOUTH

On a mission to prevent addiction

These kids are keenly aware of the epidemic swirling around them.

Catherine Jones was marching with her high school band when the group witnessed the scene of a drug overdose in Manchester. Quincy Roy has a family member who has suffered from a substance use disorder. Every kid has a story.

Members of the Makin' It Happen Coalition for Resilient Youth see drugs and alcohol as a clear and present danger to their generation. And they have put their shoulders back and found their voices and are deflecting that danger with a potent weapon: the optimism of the young.

More than 70 young people from eight schools have been trained on over-the-counter medication safety, and now train younger children. When they heard the president was coming to town, they dropped everything on a weekend to craft a message and figure out how to get him to hear it. Their example convinced leaders of a national Drug Enforcement Administration program to shift focus to youth and prevention. They have become accustomed to television cameras. They are readying for a sit-down with the governor. They are thrilled when other kids want to join the work.

Quincy's family member is in recovery and working again, buoyed by a 14-year-old's efforts.

"We're making kind of like a movement as youth," Quincy says. Catherine adds: "It's going to carry with us the rest of our lives."

Let the kids lead, and amazing things will happen.

GATHER

On a mission to make sure no one goes hungry

A family is grocery shopping at Gather Pantry Market: A small child selects fresh peppers, her mother adds milk and eggs to the grocery cart while her grandmother chooses frozen chicken.

Eleven hundred families — most of them working families — get free food here each month. One in 10 people in New Hampshire experience food insecurity.

“If you are raising three kids and making $12 an hour, that is not enough to get through,” says Deb Anthony, Gather’s executive director.

Gather recently changed its business hours to accommodate a shift change at a local retailer, so workers could come for groceries before closing.

Gather was founded in 1816 as the Ladies’ Humane Society, and known until 2016 as the Seacoast Family Food Pantry. Hunger persists. The organization has evolved with community needs.

Gather’s “Meals for Kids” program supplies groceries when school is out, to replace the meals children get at school. The program also teaches kids to cook. Gather delivers fresh groceries, plus prepared meals (cooked in the nearby homeless shelter’s kitchen) to elders.

“We are always asking “how do we make this better? How do we reinvent this?” Anthony says.

Most of the food is donated from local stores and farms. People may take what they need.

One grocer donates flowers, along with produce. Each month, an elderly gentleman comes in. He takes only flowers, to bring to his wife.

THE UPPER SACO VALLEY LAND TRUST

On a mission to sustain local farms

The realtors call. Kim and Randy Gaudette politely decline the offers.

They are the fourth generation of the Lucy family to farm this 88-acre parcel of land fronting on the Saco River in North Conway, with views of Cathedral Ledge and easy access to the famed Diana’s Baths. They keep goats and chickens and pigs and alpacas and honey bees, manage a pristine sugar bush and produce vegetables.

They are trying, with help from the Upper Saco Valley Land Trust, to make sure the Lucy Brook Farm remains farmland forever.

This river valley, with its fertile floodplains and deep topsoil, boasts some of the best farmland in northern New England. The land trust has been conserving farmland since it was founded in 2000.

But conservation is not enough. The land trust is also actively helping farmers keep farming. Local Food Systems Advocate Jesse Wright coordinates farmer-driven efforts — from “scaling up” workshops to collaborative marketing campaigns — to help the region’s farms thrive.

New England produces only 12 percent of the food it consumes, with just 5 percent of land in agricultural production. Those numbers do not bode well for food security.

“If we let some of these farms go,” says Wright, “they are not coming back.”

FROM THE CHAIR AND PRESIDENT

New Hampshire's nonprofits are on a mission to make New Hampshire better for everyone who calls New Hampshire home.

Nonprofits are making our communities stronger, and more vibrant and just. We depend on the nonprofit sector every single day, in every single city, town and neighborhood of this state.

Thousands of nonprofit professionals and volunteers make it their lives' work to help our kids reach their potential, protect our natural and cultural treasures, feed and shelter our neighbors in need, prevent addiction and support recovery. They connect us, and boost our economy, through the arts. They serve our veterans. They stand up for civil rights.

The New Hampshire Charitable Foundation is proud to do our part to bring people together to support the nonprofit sector. The generous people who give through this Foundation, and the legal and financial professionals who advise them, help advance the work of nonprofits today — and build a source of philanthropic capital to support nonprofits forever. The hundreds of volunteers on our statewide and regional boards and committees help nonprofits achieve their missions. The business people and public officials who come to our table know that building partnerships with the nonprofit sector is the way to get things done.

Every day, dedicated nonprofit professionals show up and do the work that needs doing. With intelligence and ingenuity and passion and persistence — often against daunting odds and despite thorny challenges.

We believe in them. We support them. We need them.

2017 HIGHLIGHTS

NEW HAMPSHIRE TOMORROW

New Hampshire Tomorrow is the Foundation's 10-year, $100 million investment to increase opportunities for young people. In 2017, $16.8 million was awarded in early childhood development, family and youth supports, substance use prevention, treatment and recovery, and education and career pathways.

A generous Foundation donor made a $3 million gift to provide critical prevention, treatment and recovery services for pregnant and newly-parenting women and infants affected by substance misuse.

Additional progress includes: increased scholarships for community college students; successful advocacy to secure funding for child care for struggling families, and for full-day kindergarten; quality improvements for early childhood centers; and family resource centers and youth mentoring programs strengthened and sustained.

FIFTEEN YEARS OF SUPPORTING SEACOAST ARTISTS

The Piscataqua Region Artist Advancement Grant, a $25,000 annual grant to an individual artist, is one of the largest unrestricted grants to an artist anywhere in the United States. For 15 years, the program has helped cultivate the region's arts community, boost artists' careers and help keep them living and working in the area.

NEW FOUNDATION LEADERS

Jennifer Perkins joined the Foundation's senior leadership team as vice president of administration, and Richard Peck as vice president of development and philanthropy services.

NORTH COUNTRY BOOSTED BY TILLOTSON FUND

In 2017, the Neil and Louise Tillotson Fund awarded $3,138,059 in 70 grants in Coös County and surrounding communities, and $40,500 in scholarships to North Country students. A three-year, $300,000 grant from the Tillotson Fund is helping New Hampshire Legal Assistance stay open in the North Country. Hundreds of struggling families and elders in the North Country rely on Legal Assistance for help with legal issues including eviction defense, protection from domestic violence, foreclosure prevention and health care access.

NEW FUTURES TURNS 20

The state's leading advocacy and education organization in the area of substance misuse was launched by the Foundation in 1997, with a gift from Walpole chicken farmer Oliver Hubbard.

New Futures has been instrumental in the creation of the state's Alcohol Fund, which dedicates resources from the profits of state-run liquor stores for treatment, prevention and recovery; the passage of Medicaid expansion, which gave some 130,000 people access to health insurance that included coverage for addiction treatment; and the passage of laws that have helped protect New Hampshire's young people. New Futures has trained hundreds of citizens to advocate for policy change.

DIFFERENT ROOTS, COMMON DREAMS

Seventy new funds were created at the Foundation in 2017, including The Different Roots, Common Dreams Scholarship Fund. New Hampshire photographer Becky Field, who has been documenting the lives of immigrant and refugee families since 2012, created the fund to help students who come to New Hampshire as refugees or immigrants pursue four-year college degrees.
